whereabouts, the progress of Gen. Patterson's Taylor .- Republican Farmer. division, &c. We reached Santa Fe on the evening of the first day, without one occurrence of any incident of importance, and things being somewhat in disorder, as you are aware is always the case at the commencement of a march, we got under motion at rather a late hour next morning. The column moved on in good order during the day, nothing happening except the occasional loss of a mule or horse, to the next encampment, San Juan, ahout two leagues short of this place, where we encamped for the night at an early hour, it being considered imprudent, at least by the commanding general, to press the troops, most of them new in the service. At the commencement of the march, especially as the day was very sultry, as had been the preceding one, one man, who had fallen in rear of the command, I am informed, was shot, but who he was or how he came to lag I cannot state. Farly this morning the train proceeded towards this point, and had not proceeded far when we were met by a number of soldiers, who informed us they had left Puebla with a train for Vera Cruz, which we found at the bridge, and which will have reached you long ere this letter does. Before reaching here, and about three miles back, information reached Gen. Patterson, who was in advance, that a large party of guerrilleros were about to make a descent upon the train. A halt was ordered, and Col. Jack Hays ascended a tree to reconnoitre with a glass, reported no enemy in sight-train still advancing; which report accepted, we moved on to the bridge, where we arrived about 10 o'clock, Gen. Patterson and staff occupying Santa Anna's residence as headquarters. Here we found Col. Hughes's command, composed of the Baltimore battalion and the 18th Infantry. To-day about 1 o'clock a commissioner from Padre Jarauta, named Don Gonzales Cuito, who reports himself a Veracruzado, and the son of a somewhat distinguished citizen of your place, paid Gen. P. a visit, with peace propositions in his mouth a not in his pocket, and informed the general that the padre was tired of the "pomp and ernment and return to Vera Cruz as a good citizen, and wished Gen. P.'s safeguard there-

Gen. P. very coolly informed his commissionership that if he, the padre, wished to return to Vera Cruz as a good citizen, to immediately disperse his command and proceed instanter to the city of the Ince Cross, and no one would molest him, and added, by way of incentive, that he should certainly hang every guerrillero he caught. The Don then very prudently asked the General's safeguard for timself alone, which was not granted, and he straightway departed, no doubt pleased with the result of his mission. He said Jarauta with them two tons of Silver, principally in general officer of the army, with the exception if that disease be Consumption or Liver Comwas at a point some thirty leagues from here. departure of the command early to-morrow morning.
